MORE MEN TO BE TAKEN ON.

Testerday the officials of the A.S.E. distributed £19,000 in the form of out-of-work pay to 12,000 engineers, who have been unable to resume work since the settlement. Most of the federated employers have arranged to restart the whole of their old hands to-morrow, when the number of unemployed will, according to the estimates of the men's officials, have diminished by $,000.

Friendly Imitations.

Has it ever occurred to you that the proverly. Initiation is the sincerest flattery." has a much wise meaning than that we generally apple to it. When, referring to some freed manner, his voice, or some well-known peculisarity, as a rule it is taken as hottle, or in the spirit of mocking. Imitations by actors of colleagues or rivals on the stage have usually been resented by the artists who have been ministed. There have been public imitations of prominent players that have, however, been more or less complimentary; such was Nat, and many an imitation of Irving in private society has had its origin in admiration of the actor. Men of marked individuality impress their personal peculiarities os strongly upon their friends that when speaking of them they can hardly avoid falling into an imitation of voice or manner. You will rarely hear a man who knew Phelps mention him without thrusting his hand inside his vest and shrugging his shoulders, and yet you speak of Phelps without respect. I remember being present in New York when a representative of the "Herald" interviewed Irving on his first visit to the United States, the reporter desir-

THE BYE-ELECTIONS.

So far as the "miniature general election" has yet gone, the results afford not a scrap of justification for the silly Radical vapouring about "a reaction." West Marylebone, South Wolverhampton, and Southeast Durham, where vacant seats have just been filled, bring up the number of party-tests to seven since the beginning of the year, the other four being York, Plymouth, Mid Armagh, and Dublin. But the Unionists had only two chances of scoring against their reasonable inference, therefore, that were a general election to take place now, the electorate would vote as it did in 1895, with the result of giving which was in collision off Dungen om Monday and which was sut

LONDON AND ITS GOVERN-of the representatives of twenty-one London vestries to Lord Salisbury and the Duke of Devonshire in connect with the question of the munici government of the metropolis. T government of the metropolis. That anxiety is not surprising. We are asked to believe that the inhabitants of London are longing to hand themselves over, body sand soul, to the tender mercies of the London County Council. And lo! here are districts such as Kensington and Westminster in the west, Bermondsey and Mile End in the east approaching the Prime Minister with carnest prayers to be delivered from the inestimable benefits which the municipal Socialism of Mr. Bydney Webb and his friends would confer upon them. The embrace of "Progressive" affection is, in fact, so close that it threatens to equeze the life out of London. Of course these obstinate Londoners who persist in seeking to manage their own affair. seeking to manage their own affairs, on the ridiculous ground that they know more about them than outsiders Council. Equally, of course, that is a wilful misrepresentation of their views. The truth is that they perceive that The truth is that they perceive that London must be regarded as being both a whole and an agglomeration of distinct component parts. As a whole it is a county and requires a central municipal authority—that is to say a County Council. As composed, of distinct parts, each of them with its own requirements, and each of them as large as a provincial city, London wants separate municipalities for thee districts. This is what the "Progressives" sneer at as "tenification." We are not afraid of the word, or, if it comes to that, of "twentyfactation." or "fortyfication." Who shall say what division of the municipal area the perpetual growth of London may not ultimately necessitate? Keeping in mind, therefore, this double aspect of London, its unity and its multiplicity. London, its unity and its multiplicit one arrives at the conclusion the London, its unity and its multiplicity one arrives at the conclusion that neither the centralisation nor the distribution of municipal government will suffice in itself. London must have both. The vestries, therefore, are neither emashers nor wreckers when they claim the application of that conclusion to themselves. Indeed, they distinctly disclaim any such sinister designs as those with which the "Progressives" credit them. They desire that the management of such affairs "as affect London as a county should be reserved to the existing central authority." A mong these they include such matters as the control of the fire brigade, main drainage, bridges, and other administrative duties which obviously require the existence of a county council. But experience—the experience of the best part of 10 years—has a convinced these vestries that those affairs which are strictly local, and an exclusively concern the inhabitants of particular districts, are not managed so well by the central authority as they would be by separate local authorities. The shoe of the Council does not fit every foot, and is often found to pinch soverely. More than that, the more powerful on the Council das and the ratepayers, in despair, have lost interest in their own local affair and the ratepayers, in despair, have lost interest in their own local affair to little; and they seek to redressive schemes of municipal Socialism and the ratepayers, in despair, have lost interest in their own local affair to little; and they seek to redressive schemes of municipal Socialism and the ratepayers, in despair, have lost interest in their own local affair to little; and they seek to redressive schemes of municipal Socialism and the ratepayers, in despair, have lost interest in their own local affair to little; and they seek to redressive schemes of municipal Socialism and the ratepayers, and despair, have lost interest in their own local affair to little; and they seek to redressive schemes of municipal Socialism. neither the centralisation nor the dis

NANGER IN THE CITY.

Richard Turner, 50, coachman, Glow-cester Mews, Montague-eq., was charged with being drunk and driving to the common danger. On Friday afternoon P.C. Robinson, on point duty near the Mansiom House, heard a loud shouting, and had just time to step saide when a brougham and 2 horses, driven by defendant, dashed by at a gallop. Seeing 3 ladies in the vehicle he seized the handle of the door, and ran by the side, while P.C. Reid soized the bridle of the horses and checked their speed, but not until the brougham had collided with one belonging to Mr. T. Aberroombie, smashing in the back panel.
